Monkeys are like people in many ways. In fact, some of them even go to college. A monkey college in Boston, Massachusetts, teaches some monkeys to become helpers for disabled people. They chose capuchin monkeys to be their "students" for a few reasons. Firstly, they are very smart. Secondly, they have very short tails. So, unlike other monkeys, they use their hands just like people do. Thirdly, these monkeys can live up to 40 years and get along well with humans. The monkeys at the college begin their training when they are only a few months old. They start to learn simple things such as bringing food or picking things up. Training monkeys is usually interesting but difficult. They can do more complicated things after several years of training. Most owners say their monkeys are not just helpers but also good friends.

It almost seems too hard to believe, but there is a banana that can be eaten with peel. Peel is a cover on a banana. Most people would never think of eating the peel of a banana. However, banana farmers in Japan have created a special technique for growing bananas with a peel we can eat. Farmers in Okayama, in the west of Japan, keep their banana trees at a freezing cold temperature of  $-60^{\circ}$  Celsius. The farmers then replant the trees in  $27^{\circ}$  Celsius. The huge change in temperature makes the tree suddenly grow too quickly for the peel to become hard. This makes the skin thin, soft and sweet enough to eat. The new variety of banana is called the "Mongee". Farmers are now selling it in small bunches of 10 bananas. They are not cheap. The farmers have not grown a lot of Mongee bananas, so the price is high. They want to grow more so they can sell them all over the world. This means the price will come down.

Spiders are not insects. They are actually invertebrates which mean animals without backbones. All spiders have eight legs and poisons. Spiders can live on every continent except Antarctica. There are over 44,000 known kinds of spiders. Spiders are found in every hole of houses. Spiders are unique among animals that many of them spin webs out of silk. The webs catch insects to be eaten later. Larger spiders, such as wolf spiders, huntsman, and tarantulas, attack insects rather than spin webs. Most spiders eat insects, but some of them such as tarantulas and larger spiders will eat small lizards as well. Many people fear spiders. Most spiders, however, are totally harmless to humans and are actually useful because they eat other insects or pests. Even the largest tarantula, the Goliath - bird eating spider, is harmless to humans. It is said that a tarantula's bite is about as painful as a bee's sting.
